GRADUATE STUDENT FOREIGN TRAVEL FUND

The Graduate Student Foreign Travel Fund is intended to encourage travel that would significantly enhance a graduate student's training by research or study abroad, whether during the summer or the academic year. In addition to personal development and enrichment, travel abroad can enhance the student's research skills, expand research networks, provide access to specialized equipment and expertise, develop cultural diplomacy skills, and ultimately improve career prospects. The proposed research or study abroad must be clearly structured and ideally would build upon international connections already existing among CAS faculty. Awards may be used to defray costs in connection with travel, housing and books, but may not be used for travel to conferences since graduate students can apply to the GSA for that purpose.

ELIGIBILITY AND FUNDING

Applications are invited from graduate students who are in good standing in the College of Arts and Sciences. Proposals are expected to be written by the student applicant in the guidance of the faculty sponsors at the home and/or foreign institutes; SLU sponsors must have Graduate Faculty status. Applicants may request a maximum of $1000 to support the proposed project. Only one proposal per department or program may be submitted. In the case that multiple proposals exist, departments are responsible for selecting one proposal that will be sent forward for College consideration. The College will fund one travel award each academic year, contingent upon available funding.
